A recent Bloomberg Law [PDF] feature, "Gibson Dunn's $2 Billion Litigation Arm Just Got a Big Boost," examines Gibson Dunn's continued investment in litigation and the depth of the firm's litigation platform, which the publication describes as an "army of go-to litigators for a broad range of court fights."

Bloomberg Law notes that Gibson Dunn's continued investment in litigation stands apart from a broader trend that has seen corporate and transactional practices fuel growth among many of the country's top firms. Over the past six years, the firm has added leading litigators including Bill Savitt, Jeff Wall, Barry Berke, and Trey Cox, building on an already deep bench that includes veteran trial lawyers Ted Boutrous and Orin Snyder.

The article highlights Gibson Dunn's longstanding strength in appellate litigation, including its approach of involving appellate lawyers from the earliest stages of matters and the legacy of its Appellate practice, founded by the late Ted Olson. Bloomberg Law also examines the firm's focus on developing the next generation of first-chair trial lawyers.
