The Texas Lawbook

Partner Brad Hubbard was recently quoted in the article “Small Shareholder’s Big Challenge Falls Flat as Court Upholds SB29” in The Texas Lawbook (subscription required). The article discusses a federal judge’s dismissal of a lawsuit aimed at halting a Southwest Airlines policy change. The dismissal was the first one under SB29, an extensive modification of the Texas Business Organizations Code signed into law last year.

Brad, who with of counsel Ben Wilson and associate Jaime Barrios filed an amicus brief on behalf of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Texas Association of Business, said Judge Kinkeade’s decision was “significant” because it “provides Texas-incorporated companies a clear, judicially validated pathway to limit their exposure to costly, often rent-seeking derivative litigation.”
