The team at Gibson Dunn doesn't shy from the spotlight, obvious by its representation of quarterback Tom Brady in his Deflategate appeal.

Andrew Tulumello, sports law practice group co-chair, first represented Brady, and in May the firm called in another heavy, Gibson Dunn partner Theodore Olson. The former U.S. solicitor general is known for high-profile wins before the Supreme Court.

Tulumello has represented the NFLPA and many active and retired players, and is also part of the firm's team that is representing Peyton Manning regarding allegations made by Al Jazeera over alleged usage of performance-enhancing drugs.

Richard Birns, also a co-chair of the sports law practice group, has served as an adviser in a number of major transactions, including YES Network in its sale of an approximately 80 percent stake to Fox. Birns also represented renowned agent Arn Tellem in his move to become vice chairman of Palace Sports & Entertainment.
