London

Josephine Kroneberger is an associate in the London office of Gibson Dunn and a member of the firm's International Trade and Financial Regulatory Practice Groups.

In her international trade practice, Josephine has a variety of experience working on matters involving EU and UK sanctions and export controls compliance. She is regularly involved in supporting large cross-border corporate transactions from the perspective of EU and UK sanctions and export controls due diligence and risk assessment. She also assists with trade sanctions investigations and licence applications involving the Department for Business and Trade's Office of Trade Sanctions Implementation (OTSI) and the Office of Financial Sanctions Implementation (OFSI).

In the financial regulatory space, Josephine's work spans both transactional and advisory matters. She advises a range of clients in the UK and EU, including financial institutions, FinTechs and technology companies, on financial services regulatory issues, including change in control and regulatory perimeter matters.

Josephine earned her Bachelor of Laws from King's College London. She is fluent in German and English.
