In a Law.com profile [PDF], partner and Co-Chair of our global Trial Practice Group Betty Yang shared advice to others looking to become a practice leader: “Start by leading from where you are. Take ownership, mentor others, and think beyond your own docket.”

Betty said that stepping into the role of practice group co-chair gave her a new perspective. “I quickly realized how much strategic thinking, coordination, and behind-the-scenes effort went into building and sustaining the kind of practice I had benefited from,” she said. “From managing talent and budgets to aligning with firm-wide goals and anticipating client needs, there’s a constant stream of decisions that require both precision and foresight.”
