Carbon Markets Update – Q4 2022

Client Alert | December 19, 2022

Over the last few years, market conditions have changed so dramatically that today, no matter its products or services, every company is also in the environmental business. Prompted by the real-world impacts of climate change, many consumers now demand environmental action from corporations and prefer to buy products marketed as environmentally friendly. Many companies therefore market their products as “net-zero” or “carbon neutral”—and make pledges to be, as a business, “net-zero” by a certain date. In support of these pledges, companies often buy carbon credits from voluntary carbon markets to offset or mitigate their carbon emissions voluntarily.

Voluntary carbon markets present opportunity, but also create financial, regulatory, and litigation risks. Because the voluntary markets are often fragmented, suffer from a lack of transparency and, above all, are not subject to any statutory common standards, there is a lack of trust in the credits issued under these system which also limits the tradability of the credits.

This quarterly newsletter aggregates the knowledge and experience of Gibson Dunn attorneys around the globe as we help our clients across all sectors navigate the ever-changing landscape of voluntary carbon markets.
