Sticking with real estate and antitrust for the moment, shout-out to Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher partner Christopher Dusseault and associate Sarah Kushner, who represent HomeServices of America in a separate proposed class action brought on behalf of homebuyers alleging that the brokerage conspired with NAR to inflate real estate commissions. U.S. District Judge K. Michael Moore this week granted Home Services' motion to dismiss, holding that the homebuyers were indirect purchasers lacking antitrust standing since sellers paid the commissions.
