Becker is a corporate partner in Gibson Dunn's New York office and is widely recognized as one of the elite mergers and acquisitions lawyers in the United States. For over a decade, Becker has served as Co-Chair of the firm's Mergers and Acquisitions Practice Group, which includes 400 lawyers around the world. She has represented leading companies, such as Accenture, Kraft Heinz, Merck, News Corp, PepsiCo and VMware, among others, in some of their most important corporate matters.

In addition to leading the firm's global M&A practice, Becker has held a wide range of firm leadership positions. Among other firm responsibilities, Becker serves as a member of the firmwide Executive Committee, and she created and leads the firmwide Diversity Committee.

Becker has long been a deeply committed advocate for diversity and inclusion – within the firm and beyond – and will be the first woman to lead Gibson Dunn since its inception in 1890.

"I am grateful and honored by the trust my partners have placed in me," said Becker. "I am looking forward to tackling these new challenges head on. My priorities will be continuing Gibson Dunn's track record of success through maintaining the growth of our global platform and safeguarding our culture of teamwork and collegiality. It is our culture that distinguishes us and allows us to work seamlessly and collaboratively across offices and practices to best serve our clients."

"As the first woman to lead the firm, Barbara's election is a momentous point in our firm's history. She is absolutely the right person to succeed me, and she will be an exemplary leader of Gibson Dunn," said Doran. "Barbara has a deep and abiding commitment to our culture, which is based on teamwork, collegiality, collaboration and mutual respect. She is highly regarded and respected by her fellow partners, not only because she built an extremely successful M&A practice, but also because of her unqualified commitment to diversity and inclusion."
