Partner Harris Mufson recently spoke to The AmLaw Litigation Daily [PDF] about building a destination employment litigation practice over restrictive covenant agreements. He commented on the diverse nature of enforcement of non-competes from state to state: “I find it to be a fascinating area to practice in, because there are these tremendously disparate perspectives from different states, in terms of the enforceability of these restrictive covenants.”

Harris mentioned that he didn't intend to focus his practice on employee mobility disputes but kept getting more cases after achieving key wins in high profile disputes.

“It's funny how careers develop. I've just seen such a huge wave of these cases, and I've probably handled more of them than anyone in the country over the past couple years,” he said. “So they kind of find you, I guess.”
