In a wide-ranging interview with The AmLaw Litigation Daily [PDF], partner and Appellate and Constitutional Law Practice Group co-chair Jeff Wall explained his decision to join the firm. “When I was coming up through the ranks as a junior lawyer, Gibson Dunn was the preeminent appellate practice, and has been for as long as I’ve been practicing law,” he said.

Jeff also discussed making the move to Gibson Dunn along with partners Morgan Ratner, Yaira Dubin, and Judson Littleton. He said that being able to move together as a team was an important factor in their decision: “I love those folks and I think that it’s an incredible team.” He also said that the three are “the next generation, and I think they’re the best lawyers in their generation in the country.”

In the interview, Jeff also talked about the challenges of changing firms, how he decides which cases to focus on, and trends in the world of appellate litigation.
