Kahn Scolnick and Candice Choh, Co-Partners in Charge of our Los Angeles and Century City offices, recently spoke to Law360 [PDF] about their management dynamics and the strategic and historical significance of Los Angeles to our firm following our move to a new Century City location.

Kahn told the publication, “The Century City office had sort of outgrown the ‘80s roots,” adding that the new location offers more space for lawyers and clients, as well as a larger, modernized area for events.

Candice stressed the importance of maintaining and expanding our strong presence across both sides of the city: “It was the right time for us to upsize, but do it in a thoughtful way and do it in a way that also plans for the future.”

She continued: “Century City is important for the history of Los Angeles and the culture we have here, and the closeness of the people here in the office. It’s been a part of our Los Angeles story for a really long time.”
