Ting-Wei (Alex) Chiang is an associate in the Washington, D.C. office of Gibson Dunn. He is a member of the firm's Litigation Department, where his practice focuses on intellectual property litigation, international trade, antitrust, and white collar investigations. Alex has litigated matters involving a broad range of technologies, including artificial intelligence infrastructure, semiconductor equipment, optical lenses, automobiles, and financial services. He also maintains an active pro bono practice representing nonprofit organizations in intellectual property matters.

During law school, Alex served as a judicial intern to Magistrate Judge Peggy Kuo of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York and as a law fellow at the New York State Offices of the Inspector General. Prior to law school, he worked as a legal affairs officer in the World Trade Organization's Intellectual Property, Government Procurement and Competition Division. Alex also practiced law in the Taipei office of a major U.S. law firm, where he leveraged his electrical engineering background to represent clients in patent and trade secret litigation.

Alex earned his Juris Doctor, cum laude, from New York University School of Law in 2025, where he served as a Managing Editor of the NYU Journal of Intellectual Property & Entertainment Law. He received his Master of Laws degree from National Yang Ming Chiao Tung University in 2018 and his Bachelor of Science in Electrical Engineering from National Taiwan University in 2014, where he was a member of the Network and Multimedia Lab and the Biomedical Engineering Lab.

Alex has published articles in the Georgetown Journal of International Law and the Contemporary Asia Arbitration Journal on issues relating to World Trade Organization law and international arbitration. He was named a Google Policy Fellow for his research on digital trade at the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation Policy Support Unit.

Alex is a native Mandarin speaker and is admitted to practice law in the District of Columbia.
