Abram Dorrough is an associate in the Houston office of Gibson Dunn and is a member of the firm's Tax Practice Group. His practice involves advising clients on federal income taxation issues related to corporations, partnerships, real estate investment trusts (REITs), and tax-exempt organizations.

Abram earned his Juris Doctor, cum laude, from the J. Reuben Clark Law School at Brigham Young University, where he served as Executive Editor of the Brigham Young University Law Review and was a member of the BYU Tax Law Society and the BYU Corporate Law Society. While in law school, he interned with Judge David Nuffer of the United States District Court for the District of Utah and with Chief Justice Matthew Durrant of the Utah Supreme Court.

Before law school, he earned a Bachelor of Science in Economics, cum laude, from Brigham Young University, and he worked for several years as a federal law enforcement officer.

Abram speaks Spanish, French, and German, and he is a student of several other languages.

He is admitted to practice in the State of Texas.
