London

Ksenija Radonjic is an associate in the London office of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and a member of the International Trade and Litigation practice groups.

She focuses her practice on all aspects of international trade as well as financial crime matters, particularly in a wide range of compliance issues such as financial and trade sanctions, anti-corruption and anti-money laundering regulation as well as other aspects of international trade including export control, free trade agreements and trade remedies.

In addition, Ksenija practices in the litigation and arbitration spheres, having assisted on high-value cross-border disputes acting mainly for banks and other financial services institutions. She has a strong background in civil procedure and the conflict of laws, and advised regularly on the range of issues from a dispute resolution perspective arising out of the UK post-Brexit environment.

Prior to joining Gibson Dunn, Ksenija worked for international law firms in the UK and Europe, and at the European Commission in Brussels, gaining significant experience in commercial cross-border disputes tried before the European Court of Justice, corporate crime, international sanctions and trade. Most recently, she was an associate at a large global law firm in the Trade, Regulatory and Disputes team in London. She has also been on client secondment to a major investment bank.

Ksenija acted for a number of pro-bono clients providing comprehensive sanctions advice from engaging with regulators and making licence applications to investigations and contentious advice.

Ksenija speaks English, Serbian, German and Portuguese, and has worked on matters in these languages.
