Andrew Robb is a partner in the Palo Alto office of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher. He practices in the firm's Litigation department, with a focus on patent and other technology-based disputes. He has litigated numerous cases in a variety of forums, including the International Trade Commission, federal district court, and California state court. Representative technologies Andrew has litigated include digital signal processing, network architecture, cloud security and failure analysis, mobile communications, chip design, wireless networking, and power management, among others.

Representative Matters:

- Represents multiple leading technology companies on patent and privacy-related litigation matters involving machine learning and artificial intelligence technologies, including models relating to voice detection, facial modeling, ASR, and user identification.
- Represents a ride-sharing company in multiple patent cases involving location, network infrastructure, and transportation-related technologies.
- Represented a fitness and technology company in an ITC investigation brought by a competitor alleging patent infringement and theft of trade secrets. Following a six-day hearing, the administrative law judge issued a written decision rejecting every one of the competitor's claims.
- Represented that same fitness and technology company in another ITC investigation brought by another entity, alleging patent infringement. Following a multi-day hearing, the administrative law judge issued a written decision rejecting all of the Complainant's remaining claims.
- Represented a telecommunications company in patent dispute in the Eastern District of Texas brought by competitor relating to SEPs. Case settled favorably a few days before trial.
- Represented a leading technological company in multi-billion dollar bid protest, with primary responsibility for developing and briefing core technical arguments. The government ultimately cancelled the contract, after multiple rulings by court in favor of the client.
- Represented a technological company in criminal investigation relating to purported theft of trade secrets, with a favorable outcome for the client.
- Represented a leading consumer device company in misappropriation of trade secrets matter brought against a former employee.

Andrew previously served as a member of the firm's pro bono committee, and he maintains an active pro bono docket. Previously, he successfully obtained vacatur and remand for a Veteran in an appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, and he successfully obtained a five-year restraining order, the statutory maximum,
