Margaux Hall's recent arrival as a partner in the firm's Washington, D.C. office drew coverage from leading legal and industry publications, which noted her drug pricing and health regulatory experience and the expansion of the firm's FDA and Health Care practice.

Law360 described Margaux as a lawyer "who works with a myriad of health regulatory and drug pricing matters, advising pharmaceutical manufacturers, investors and other entities on those issues." Jonathan Philips, Co-Chair of the firm's FDA and Health Care Practice Group, welcomed her arrival, noting that she is a go-to adviser to clients and will help strengthen the practice.

"As pricing and reimbursement issues increasingly influence transactions, commercialization strategy, and investment decisions across the life sciences industry, her specialized expertise — combined with our deep bench across regulatory, transactional, white collar, and litigation disciplines — positions us to advise clients on their most consequential matters," Philips said.

In an interview with International Comparative Legal Guide, Margaux pointed to the firm's platform as a draw. "Gibson Dunn's unmatched platform across regulatory, litigation, investigations, and transactional practices creates an exceptionally strong foundation for advising clients on today's pricing and market access challenges," she said.

Bloomberg Law reported that Margaux "plans to continue to advise biopharmaceutical manufacturers and life science clients," adding that she has "found that a variety of clients need sophisticated counsel in this space."
