Raymond Azar’s recent arrival in Gibson Dunn’s New York office as Co-Chair of its Power and Renewables Practice Group drew coverage from leading legal and industry publications, with reports focusing on the firm’s growth and rising demand across the power sector.

New York Law Journal described Raymond as “the latest in a string of energy partners to join Gibson Dunn,” reporting that the firm “has added 10 partners to its global energy and infrastructure platform this year as it looks to expand in the growing market for power.”

“The firm is advising some of the most sophisticated clients at the forefront of what is happening across the power and infrastructure sectors,” Raymond told the publication. He added: “Clients increasingly need development, financing and M&A advice in a single conversation rather than three.”

Global Legal Chronicle described Raymond as “a leading project finance lawyer,” noting that his arrival “continues the expansion of the firm’s energy and infrastructure platform.”

Additionally, The Deal and Project Finance International reported on Raymond’s work advising on major power transactions, including Brookfield’s acquisition of Aypa Power and EDF’s sale of power operations and assets in the U.S. and Canada to KKR.
