Partner Rosemary Spaziani spoke with Bloomberg Law (subscription required) about President Trump's landmark legislation that seeks to streamline an assortment of state-level regulations of stablecoins, tasking a federal committee with screening and recertifying each state regime to align with the statute itself.

Discussing whether the process will result in rubber stamps or bottlenecks, Ro said: "If 40 states all sign on to what the federal government does, those are going to be pretty simple rubber stamps — they're going to adopt a model act and incorporate it into their laws." She added, "The ones that deviate are probably going to be a bit of a bottleneck."
