In his article "AI Hones Bet-the-Company Cases Early, Scaling Back Discovery Woes" [PDF] for Bloomberg Law, partner Trey Cox writes that in large-scale litigation, general counsel must know "which 20 percent of the case will determine 80 percent of the risk rather than know about every document in a file." He argues that "the rule is simple: Use AI to apply the 80/20 rule, then concentrate legal and business resources on those critical facts with ruthless discipline."
