

GIBSON DUNN

September 27, 2019

Statement of Theodore B. Olson of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP regarding Dep't of Homeland Sec., et al. v. Regents of the Univ. of Cal., et al.

Before the government can terminate DACA, the public deserves—and the law requires—that the government explain its decision clearly and truthfully. Instead, the government claims that DACA is unlawful, even though it is consistent with seventy years of similar deferred action immigration policies carried out by presidential administrations of both political parties. If the government wants to end this policy, DACA recipients and the public at large deserve a genuine explanation of the reasons, so that the government can be held accountable for its actions.

* * *

Statement of Luis Cortes Romero of the Immigrant Advocacy & Litigation Center, PLLC regarding Dep't of Homeland Sec., et al. v. Regents of the Univ. of Cal., et al.

DACA has brought stability, predictability, and dignity to me and to hundreds of thousands of other people, allowing us to support our families, further our educations, serve in the military, and contribute to our communities and the economy. The government never considered the hardships that we and our families and communities would endure without DACA. The Supreme Court should not allow the government to upend our lives by ending DACA without even considering these consequences.

* * *

Theodore B. Olson, Theodore J. Boutrous, Jr., Ethan D. Dettmer and Stuart F. Delery of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP represent individual DACA recipients Dulce Garcia, Miriam Gonzalez Avila, Saul Jimenez Suarez, Viridiana Chabolla Mendoza, Norma Ramirez, and Jirayut Latthivongskorn in the United States Supreme Court. In addition to the team at Gibson Dunn, these individuals are also represented by Luis Cortes Romero of the Immigrant Advocacy & Litigation Center, PLLC; Mark D. Rosenbaum and Judy London of Public Counsel; Dean Erwin Chemerinsky of UC Berkeley School of Law; Professor Laurence H. Tribe of Harvard Law School; and Professor Leah M. Litman of the University of Michigan Law School.